When I feel angry towards someone, I have a tendency to put a lot of blame on them. In such situations, I would weigh my anger and the reasons behind it against their love and concern for me. I would evaluate myself and assess which aspect I needed more of, and based on that, I would determine my next course of action. If my reasons seemed stronger, I would distance myself from them, but if their care and love outweighed my anger, I would convince myself to apologize to them. I considered this ability to balance my emotions and actions as one of my best qualities.
